To whom it may concern,

Re: Graham Daniels

Please allow me to tell you just a little about my own background which I feel would be appropriate to begin with. I have been heavily involved with education of one sort or another for a great many years. Beginning with home schooling my two children and going on to organise seminars for adults who wished to acquire specialist knowledge, particularly in the off shore financial arena. Whilst home schooling, I served on the board of The Home Schooling Federation of New Zealand for two years, the only government recognised body representing home scholars in New Zealand. I continue adult seminar education to this day, in addition to being the CEO of two companies. This is the background of my experience that was eventually to bring about the cause for Graham and I to cross our paths. As chance would have it, I was very fortunate to get the opportunity to hear Graham's father, Peter, speak publicly a long time before I ever got to meet Graham in person. I was extremely impressed with Peter's delivery, so it was a huge bonus for me when I eventually got to discover first hand that Graham spoke with the same eloquence, passion and power as his father. Graham has been a keynote speaker at a number of seminars that I have personally helped to organise and run. Without exception, Graham's message has always been received with enormous enthusiasm. While banking tends to be a forte, Graham's knowledge is extensive and authoritative on a number of topics and to my enormous pleasure I find that biblical principals are always applied to his material.

I can only speak in glowing terms about the man, the friend, the speaker and teacher that is Graham Daniels.

Most sincerely,

Norm Berry
